Performance part of SFJAZZ's John Luther Adams Festival running July 26-30

(San Francisco, CA, July 11, 2017) – SFJAZZ and the Golden Gate National Parks Conservancy join forces to present Pulitzer Prize and Grammy-winning composer John Luther Adams' Inuksuit in a free outdoor performance at Lands End and Sutro Baths on Saturday, July 29 at 1:00pm. Composer Doug Perkins of Sō Percussion directs this exclusive event located on the north end of Ocean Beach where Geary Boulevard and the Great Highway converge. Inuksuit is scored for 9 to 99 percussion players who are widely dispersed in an outdoor area. For more information, visit SFJAZZ.org.

This performance of Inuksuit is part of SFJAZZ's John Luther Adams Festival running Wednesday, July 26 to Sunday, July 30 with events at the SFJAZZ Center and Grace Cathedral. The Festival celebrates Adams' innovative works as they are from a uniquely American viewpoint with emphasis on the natural world, the Alaskan wilderness, and the culture of the arctic Inuit people and other indigenous populations.

Named for the iconic human-shaped stone monuments erected by indigenous peoples of the Arctic to mark important locations, Inuksuit is intended to create a harmonious marriage of music and geography that allows the audience to create their own experience as they move within the vast performance area. As listeners walk, the balance between various musicians located within the space changes, mixed with the natural sounds of the environment – a primary aspect of the concept the composer calls "sonic geography."

"Each performance of Inuksuit is different," Adams explains, "determined by the size of the ensemble and the specific instruments used, by the topology and vegetation of the site -- even by the songs of the local birds. The musicians are dispersed throughout a large area, and the listeners are free to discover their own individual listening points, which actively shapes their experience."

The five-day John Luther Adams Festival begins at the SFJAZZ Center with a Listening Party with Adams and SFJAZZ Founder and Executive Artistic Director Randall Kline on Wednesday, July 26. On July 27, the JACK Quartet performs the US-premiere of The Wind in High Places, Untouched, Canticles of the Sky, Dream of the Canyon Wren and, on July 28, the world premiere of John Luther Adams' Everything That Rises. At San Francisco's Grace Cathedral on Saturday, July 29 from 4:00pm to 10:00pm, Veils and Vespers is a meditative electronic soundscape that develops over a six-hour period. On Sunday, July 30 at SFJAZZ Center, Adam Marks will perform the Adams' solo piano piece Nunataks and Doug Perkins will perform the solo percussion piece Ilimaq.

"People often find similar meaning both in music and nature—an emotional response that evokes awe, hope, and connection the world beyond oneself," said Kate Bickert, Senior Director, Engagement & New Initiatives, Golden Gate National Parks Conservancy. "This partnership with SFJAZZ is the latest in our experimental new program, Tunes on Trails, which seeks to provide community connection to music and nature through brief pop-up concerts in different park locations.
